InfraTalk America Launches the InfraTalk Podcast with Host Greg Nadeau

Former FHWA Administrator and Guests Bring a New Focus to the Future of Infrastructure Innovation

Washington, DC – InfraTalk America, a growing multi-media platform focused on inspiring national conversations that advance innovative technologies and policies in the transportation infrastructure sector, launched a new bi-weekly podcast today, Thursday, November 17th.

The InfraTalk Podcast, hosted by ITA Publisher and former Federal Highway Administrator Gregory Nadeau, features thought-provoking conversations with industry leaders who are working to mainstream innovation. Topics include digital project delivery, safety policies, workforce development, the future of sustainable practices and more.

The first season of the podcast is kicking off with a mini-series titled, “Women Leading Innovation in Transportation Infrastructure.” Guests include Victoria Sheehan, commissioner of the New Hampshire Department of Transportation and incoming executive director of the Transportation Research Board; Shanté Hastings, deputy secretary and chief engineer at Delaware Department of Transportation and chair of the American Association of State Highway and Transportation Officials’ Innovation Initiative; and Audrey Copeland, president and CEO of the National Asphalt Pavement Association.

“Each of these women leaders have made remarkable strides in moving the industry forward and we are stronger because of their ingenuity, creativity, and extraordinary leadership,” said Nadeau. “We hope that by highlighting their phenomenal work, we can catalyze change and perhaps inspire young women and girls to pursue a career within the transportation infrastructure industry.”

Both the preview episode and Episode 1, Victoria Sheehan: Mainstreaming Technology, are available on Spotify and Apple Podcasts. The conversation focuses on the challenges state departments of transportation face in advancing innovations and how agencies can work to overcome these barriers.

We hope you will join us in these vital discussions about how innovation has transformed the way we do business and the future of infrastructure in America. For more information about the podcast or InfraTalk America, click here.
